This handsome Grade II-listed townhouse is in the heart of Hay-on-Wye, a town as famous for its literary heritage and bookshops as it is for the stunning Brecon Beacons that surround it. Built in the late 17th-century, the once timber-framed façade was later refurbished with the grand and symmetrical Georgian stucco three-storey, three-window roughcast façade that still stands today. Extending to over 3,000 sq ft with six bedrooms and live work classification, the house is full of period features, such as exposed beams, original fireplaces and vast sash windows.

Setting the Scene

The house was originally two separate buildings, joined together and heightened during a Georgian refurbishment. One was the original post office of Hay-on-Wye, mentioned in the famous 19th-century travel log Kilvert's Diary; the other, a gable-ended brick cross range with rubble chimney breast. During the joining and renovation, a slate roof, wide eaves and a brick chimney stack were added. The central, cast-iron trellised iron porch is also thought to be Georgian, as well as the four-panel half-glazed door. For more information, please see the History section.

The Grand Tour

Iron railings and a gate open to a flagstone path that leads through a front garden planted with herbaceous perennials. The cream stucco façade of the house is punctuated by windows, a front door, and a porch painted in a contrasting blue.

Entry is to the main reception room, painted in the neutral tone, accented by the exposed oak beams that run overhead. A wood burner sits in the original hearth, decorated with a stone fireplace. Across the hall, a second reception room is used by the current owners as the dining room for the bed and breakfast run in the front portion of the house. Original floorboards run underfoot, and the room is anchored by the pretty fire grate complemented by a striking surround in the same shade. Eight-over-eight sash windows let in light across the ground floor and overlook the front garden.

At the back of the plan is a large kitchen with French doors onto the patio and garden beyond. Shelves run along the walls, and exposed copper piping adds rustic charm. A pair of reclaimed half-glazed doors lead onto the expansive living area. Here, there are lime-washed beams, and a cosy wood burner is set in the Georgian fireplace; this room also has direct access to the garden.

A central staircase in the hallway leads to the first and second floors, acting as a spine in the centre of the house. On the first floor is the principal bedroom, which is entered through a walk-in dressing room. Dual-aspect, this room overlooks both the front and back garden. The pretty en suite has double vanity sinks made from reclaimed 19th-century wash basins and a beautiful rolltop bathtub. A separate staircase from the back living room gives access to the two other bedrooms on the first floor, one with a rolltop bath and chamfered lime-washed beams. Both share a bathroom with double sinks and a shower.

On the second floor, a further three bedrooms are en suite, with one set into the eaves and illuminated by skylights.

The Great Outdoors

Running along the rear of the house is a flagstone patio with a covered seating area shaded by a substantial fig tree that blooms with fruit in the summer. It is protected from winds and the perfect spot for eating outside on a sunny day. Potted perennials lead onto a workshop area and further shed. A few steps lead up to the garden lawn, where an established yew hedge with a lancet-cut aperture demarcates the garden beyond this. This secondary garden space has planning for a one-storey tabernacle for use in conjunction with the house and with access from the back lane, which runs along the rear border of the plan. Planning permission for this can be found here.

Out and About

Hay-on-Wye is a lively town famed for its many bookshops and revered literary event, the Hay Festival or, as it's been coined, 'the Woodstock of the mind'. Richard Booth's Bookshop and Cinema is a local institution. The Old Electric Shop is a well-curated emporium, stocking the work of local artisans alongside vintage clothes and books. It also serves delicious modern vegetarian food. Chapters is a celebrated local restaurant with serious foodie credentials. The beloved borders sheep's milk ice cream maker, Shepherds, can also be found in Hay. Hay Castle is a centre for arts, literature and learning with a full range of events, exhibitions and workshops throughout the year.

There are opportunities for canoeing and swimming on the River Wye, within a five-minute walk of the house. The village of Cusop is nearby with a church and a village hall. Cusop Dingle was historically a hive of industrial activity with five working mills driven by the Dulas Brook, which formed the western boundary with Wales. The brook and river, which are home to trout, otter and kingfishers, are a short walk away from the house and provide access to Offa's Dyke Path, the trail to Hay Bluff and extensive hillwalking routes through the Black Mountains.

Enjoying close ties with Hay, equally lively Presteigne is a short drive away and has an excellent fishmonger and greengrocer, as well as a popular pizzeria, Daphne's. Ludlow and Ledbury are both within reach, as is the city of Hereford, the Forest of Dean and the Brecon Beacons.
